What is Esperanto?

It's a language.

Important traits of Esperanto:

International

Esperanto is most useful for communicating among people of diverse nations who do not have a common mother tongue.

Easy

Thanks to the structure of Esperanto, it's usually much easier to master than other foreign languages.

Living

Esperanto evolves and lives just like other languages, and it can be used to express all facets of human thought and emotion.

Neutral

It doesn't belong to one people or country, so it works as a neutral language.

Equal

When you use Esperanto, you feel more equal from a linguistic standpoint than when, for example, you speak Spanish with a native Spanish speaker.

For me, Esperanto is having good friends all around the world.
Oleg, 22, Russia

As for us, we like using Esperanto. Everyday we communicate with friends in different countries and continents, mostly online. We find Esperanto to be a good tool for making new friends and working together with people who speak different native languages.

The team of lernu!

The freest language in the world!
Katja, 23, Sweden

It made me want to learn more and explore my world.
Jacob, 27, USA

Esperanto is a large part of my life.
Jevgenij, 25, Lithuania

For me Esperanto has opened up a whole new borderless world of diversity and friendship.
Rafael, 27, Dominican Republic

Multilingual webpage for Esperanto

www.lernu.net

lernu! is a website that contains information about Esperanto as a language and a phenomenon, and multiple courses and support materials to learn Esperanto. The main goal of this website is to help 'netizens' who want to easily learn about Esperanto for free, and learn the language.

In the site you will find courses at various levels, dictionaries in many languages, an overview of Esperanto's grammar, lesson texts with sound and pictures, an instant messenger for direct communication, and much more.

The image shows several overlapping screenshots of the lernu.net website. One screenshot displays the 'Bonvenon al lernu!' (Welcome to lernu!) page with a cat illustration and introductory text. Another shows a language selection menu with options like Esperanto (eo), English (en), Spanish (es), etc. A third screenshot shows a 'dictionary' section for the word 'espero' with its definition in Esperanto. A fourth shows an 'instant messenger' interface. The website header includes navigation links like 'Kursoj' and 'Parto 1'.

lernu! was developed by the international group Esperanto@Interreto (E@I). The three primary fields of interest of E@I are to develop web pages, to arrange seminars, and to work to promote the use of Esperanto on the Internet as a means for fast and easy international communication.

The lernu! project is financially supported by the Esperantic Studies Foundation (ESF). ESF was founded in 1968 to support and stimulate the growth of English-language technical literature on Esperanto. Eventually the use of Esperanto in education became one of the foundation's highest priorities.
